Journal of Medical Regulation

Seeks Editor-in-Chief

The Federation of State Medical Boards (FSMB), publisher of the Journal of Medical Regulation (JMR), has appointed a search committee to identify the next Editor-in-Chief for JMR. The five-year appointment (with the option for renewal) will officially begin in May 2023. The search committee, chaired by FSMB board member, Dr. Andrea Anderson, will screen nominees and bring forward a final recommendation to the FSMB Journal Oversight Committee.

Published since 1913, JMR has served as a primary vehicle through which the US and international medical regulatory community has shared new knowledge and best practices about physician licensure, discipline, and regulation. The Editor-in-Chief leads the JMR editorial board, examining interdisciplinary trends and topics of interest to the national and international community of medical regulators who protect the public's health and safety through the licensing and disciplining of physicians and other health care professionals. FSMB will offer a small financial stipend to the new Editor-in-Chief.

FSMB encourages nominations from a diverse pool of candidates without regard to race, creed, age, gender, national origin, country of residence, or any other category protected by law.

Applicants should have experience in the field of medical regulation and have demonstrable editorial and leadership skills. The Editor-in-Chief should have a broad knowledge of medical regulation, the ability to identify and anticipate the wide range of interests in medical regulation, licensure, and discipline, and implement a plan to ensure the scientific standing of the journal. Information about the responsibilities of the editor can be found here:
